

The Tennessee Pollution Prevention Partnership (TP3) celebrates Ten Years as an environmental network and leadership program. This September 23 and 24, TP3 Members will host the fifth biennial statewide conference at Montgomery Bell State Park. Through leadership and outreach activities, TP3 Members have been working to encourage, inspire, and assist others in developing and implementing ideas, policies, and practices to progress through the TP3 membership levels: Prospect to Pledge to Partner and Performer.

The general theme for this conference will be the relationships between good business and living practices with sustainability and pollution prevention ideals. The conference will provide opportunities to share projects, stories, and innovations with peers and conference attendees. Presentation sessions will offer venues for exploration and discussion of challenges and ideas with experts and peers.

Topics for the conference include

- Renew-Reuse-Conserve; Living Lightly on the Earth
- The New Green Economy and Sustainable Business
- Changing to Meet New Challenges

The 2010 TP3 Conference ensures another excellent program for attendees. Keynote and plenary speakers and panelists will present and discuss cutting edge topics, encourage action, and provide practical applications for all, with “take home messages” and “tools for putting ideas into action.” Attendees will hear from experts on green business issues, sustainability, and the role of personal responsibility. Leaders in TP3, TDEC and EPA’s P2 and other Environmental Stewardship programs will enlighten with innovative success stories.

While attending the conference, visitors are encouraged to take some time to enjoy the beauty of Montgomery Bell State Park, just 40 miles west of Nashville. There are opportunities to hike, fish, golf, and learn about the flora, fauna, and history of the park area.
